Twitter-Meeting

<http://lrnchat.com> is a Twitter-based real-time discussion on

Takes place from every Thursday night 8:30-10pm EST / 5:30-7pm PST
(An earlier session is run for people in Europe and elsewhere)

A new Question every 15 minutes:

Q1) "What if" is today's theme. What if HR was all focused on human resources (not just policies, benefits, liabilities)?

Q2) What if the "Learning" department only focused on learning, rather than training, course development, schedules?

Q3) What if managers really managed? What could they be managing more of & what would they be doing less of?

Q4) What if supply actually followed demand? How would orgs be different? Especially L&D, HR, mgmt & leadership?

Transcription of each chat is posted on the website

Adding Synchronous

Brenda, the real leap here seems to be adding the synchronous and perhaps increasing the group interaction to what

Are there bits of the curriculum that could lend themselves to a group online synch event that asks them to figure something out for themselves and offer their advice and questions? (I don't know why, but I seem to be focused on cases today!)

What I have found valuable as a student in a predominantly solo learning experience is to get the different perspectives on what's missing in a solo and could possibly add a lot for your group. But it has to have a real connection to the curriculum.

Brenda Hallowes - 01:15am Sep 15, 2005 GMT (4.1.1)
Tutor for ACE at Univ. of KwaZulu Natal. Mentor

yes!

Hi Nancy Yes, I'm all fired up to try a few tricks with my group. I am certainly going to experiment with a synchronous session. It will add a bit of fun.

Joitske Hulsebosch - 03:12pm Sep 26, 2005 GMT (4.2)

Open university online failure

Hi Brenda, I read your purpose checklist yesterday (as well as the others), it's interesting reading

Your is different from my case I think in the sense that in my case the focus is on teacher-teacher peer learning from my own open university subject I did. We had an online space, but it was limited to everyone posting their responses to questions already much better because you can facilitate that interaction.

Lessons

- Presenters and Subject Matter Experts won't always see the benefit of interactive learning... at first “Won't it just require more preparation time?”
- Participants respond positively to the invitation to be more engaged and involved in the learning process...
- ...so long as there is a rhythm to the process
    Don't use too many techniques without good reason
- Be Creative!
    Borrow, Adapt, Co-create, Be Inspired
- And Have Fun...

Randel|Consulting|Associates

Michael Randel has more than 20 years experience designing and facilitating interactive learning events for clients all over the world. His experience of working with clients from more than 25 countries has resulted in a unique framework for designing interactive learning experiences that can be applied in groups of all sizes, whether meeting in person or virtually.

Michael's broad experience ranges from coaching individuals to designing and running learning programs for up to four hundred people. He builds the capacity of his clients to develop and run their own engaging programs, whether face-to-face or virtual.

Michael founded Randel Consulting Associates in 2006, a Maryland-based firm that works with clients at local, national and global levels. His clients describe his work as being “instrumental in framing and planning the event according to our learning needs and our intended audience.” He holds a Master's degree in Social and Organizational Learning from George Mason University, and has published a variety of handbooks and articles.

Michael is a Certified Professional Facilitator and is an active participant in the Metro DC Chapter of ASTD.
